

Shire Country Park 5 kilometre walking route

Start at Sarehole Mill, cross the Cole Bank Road and join the John Morris Jones Walkway.

Now one of Birmingham's last two working watermills. There has been a mill on the site since before 1542; the current buildings date back to the 18th century.

Pass Colebank Playing Fields on the right.

In summer, common speedwell and lady's smock carpet the field edges, if left uncut.

Follow the River Cole on left.

Rangers carry out habitat management along the valley; the laid hedge provides cover for nesting wrens and dunnocks. Also, kingfishers can be seen as they hunt for fish along the meandering river.

At the end of the walkway, cross Brook Lane and walk along Coleside Avenue to Four Arches Bridge (on left) and The Dingles.

Walk along the grass pathway, keeping the River Cole on right and the undulating medieval ridge and furrow on the left, then see sculpture, The

Here are thickets of willow and hawthorn and birds include thrush and redwing. In places the grass is left to grow, and together with tree planting, provides a habitat for wildflowers and insects, birds and mammals.

Out of the park, cross Highfield Road and follow pathway to main entrance of Trittiford Park and the Mill Pool, which used to serve Trittiford Mill.
